England is full of big interesting museums. All the people can find something for themselves there. Science or History museums can make pupils more keen on a subject. They draw on the attention of tourists, who are fond of learning new things about England.

So, how can the boards of directors increase the number of visits to England museums? The British museum happens to be the mostly visited among all ~~from~~ ^{since} 2013 to 2017. It is rated on top. The next one is National Gallery. Tate Gallery seems to have become more popular with years. As for National History Museum and Science Museum, they are losing their popularity, comparing to the rest.

I have a few suggestions on how to increase the attendance of museums and galleries. The first and probably the most important is to lower ticket price. A lot of people who would like to visit a museum simply can not afford it. Another option is to make some percent off for students and elder people. The second thing that may be done is advertizing. Nowadays, almost everything is being advertized. Why not do the same? It may remind people to take a break from their worries and clear their heads a little.

Of course, there are a lot of other ways to rise the attendance, but we can start here. Because it is important to remember all the valuable things and events from the past. Museums and galleries can help us with that.
